Weather Bureau Makes Arrangement to Warn Provo Orchardists of Impending Frosts.

With the approach of the blossoming period of orchards of the Provo district office of the United States weather bureau, is making final arrangements for o-operation with the fruitgrowers that district in the prevention of frost that district in the prevention of frost destruction.

The following circular of instructions has been issued by the bureau and will be sent to all growers, with instructions for them to make arrangements to cooperate with the bureau.

"All growers who desire to obtain the greatest benefit of this co-operation are urged to install a telephone and thermometers.

On nights of impending frosts the

"On nights of impending frosts the growers will telephone their temperatures every half hour to the Commercial club. Frove, beginning at 6.30 p. m., and continue until advised to cease. Warnings of frost will be issued from the Commercial club either in the morning of the day preceding a frost.

"Very reliable thermometers should be installed in every orchard—one to an acre would not be too many. This is for the purpose of knowing just where the coldest places are. The thermometers at the coldest places are. The thermometers at the coldest places should be read regularly every half hour on nights when frost is expected and reported as requested.

"By a reliable thermometer is meant one that is guaranteed by the maker not be in error more than one-half degree. A cheap thermometer is generally incorrect, different amounts at different portions of the scale. At 40 degrees it may be 2 degrees too high. But this quality is not the worst that can be said of a cheap thermometer.
